

Jackson Institute for Global Affairs at Yale University

We recognize there is more than one way to enter a career in the global arena. Our program will allow you to design your own path through an individualized course of study. This intellectually demanding and diverse program will provide you with the theoretical foundations and analytical skills necessary for working within the complexity of today's public, nonprofit and private sectors worldwide.

PROGRAM FEATURES

- Small by design, with 25–30 students per year
- Generous merit-based funding packages
- MA candidates with diverse backgrounds and career interests serve as a resource to each other while at Yale, and form lifelong connections
- Global Affairs students form part of larger intellectual and social Yale community and alumni network
- Joint degree programs offered with Yale's Schools of Forestry & Environmental Studies, Law, Management, and Public Health

PROGRAM DETAILS

- 16 courses taken over two years, plus demonstrated proficiency in foreign language
- 3 foundation courses: history, applied methods of economics, and quantitative analysis for public affairs
- Individualized interdisciplinary concentrations
- Courses taught by faculty throughout Yale and across disciplines
- Intimate seminar-style courses taught by prominent practitioners from the public and private sectors
- Funding for summer internships and research projects
- Weekly career workshops and job talks, networking events in NYC and Washington, DC, and small group meetings with prominent professionals working in the US and abroad